Impressionism in music was a movement among various composers in Western classical music (mainly during the late 19th and early 20th centuries) whose music focuses on suggestion and atmosphere, "conveying the moods and emotions aroused by the subject rather than a detailed tone-picture". "Impressionism" is a philosophical and aesthetic term borrowed from late 19th-century French painting ...

History. As a musical movement, nationalism emerged early in the 19th century in connection with political independence movements, and was characterized by an emphasis on national musical elements such as the use of folk songs, folk dances or rhythms, or on the adoption of nationalist subjects for operas, symphonic poems, or other forms of music (Kennedy 2006).

The article takes its basis in D.W. Winnicott's theories of play and transitional space to argue that Stagnation-era sound recordings and animated films found a devoted audience of both adults and children because, like Winnicott's good-enough mother or therapist, they created the conditions for playing: they did not merely narrate play, but also embodied, invited, and enacted it.
